

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES
OF LONDON

Access Statement

The Society remains committed to improving access to its library and museum collections for education, research and enjoyment by the general public, researchers and its Fellowship, and looks for positive means by which it can promote both its collections and the work of the Society. A Royal Charter, which acts as a mission statement, and the Society's strategic aims and intentions, encapsulated this commitment to access through conservation, research and dissemination.

The Society is committed to becoming a library and museum service that is inspiring, enthusing, educational and sustainable. As such, the Society will be exploring ways in which it can encourage a greater degree of participation with new and existing audiences, both physically and virtually, and will be using its public programming to actively seek ways of encouraging visitors to experience and engage with the process of conservation and research, and to discover its collections as a resource for learning and enjoyment.
