

Antiquaries Journal: copyright permissions

Authors are responsible for obtaining third-party copyright permission for the use of illustrations and prose or poetry extracts, and for paying any reproduction or copyright fees. Permission should be sought to reproduce illustrations and text in electronic form as well as in conventional print.

Copyright in the UK extends over the life of the author and seventy years from the end of the year in which the author dies. Different rules apply in other countries.

For text, copyright must be cleared for

- any prose extract longer than 400 words
- a series totalling more than 800 words
- a series of which any one is more than 300 words
- an extract or series of extracts comprising a quarter of the work or more

For poetry, copyright must be cleared for

- an extract of a quarter of a complete poem
- a series of extracts comprising a quarter or more of a complete poem

Most copyright holders will treat requests for reproduction in an academic journal or not-for-profit publication differently from reproduction in a commercial publication. If you are asked to clarify the Journal's status and print run it is a peer-reviewed academic journal with a print run of 3,500 copies.
